- Since IPO, MOEX has returned 8.2% (RUB 17.2 bln) of the YE 2015 market cap (RUB 208.3 bln) to shareholders in the form of dividends

NCC capital target: RUB 55.6 bln

NCC capital (end of period)

Key takeaways

Target level of NCC capital is set at RUB 55.6 bln based on:

- ✓ CCP Stress-tests with a new risk-covering mechanism
Capital should be sufficient to cover potential losses under a stress scenario and keep business operational
- ✓ New CBR regulation of capital adequacy ratio
CAR should be sufficient under Basel III rules (min of 8% versus 10% previously), and following adjustments of capital (skin in the game) and RWA

New regulation and its impact on NCC capital requirements

1

New regulation of CCPs in Russia

The CBR required all CCPs to be incorporated as entities with (i) clearing and (ii) non-credit banking organization licenses. The law was adopted in Dec 2015 with a transition period of 2 years for NCC. The licenses switch is expected to move regulation of NCC away from a classical banking regulation towards best practices of CCP regulation, which may reduce capital requirements for NCC in the long-run.

2

New financial stability recovery mechanism

Risk-protection system was unified across all markets and aligned with CPSS-IOSCO requirements. New "Skin in the game" size was approved by the NCC's Supervisory Board in line with the CBR's requirements:

- ✓ RUB 6.5 bln since Nov 2015
- ✓ RUB 9.5 bln since July 2016 (planned)

'Skin in the game' is deducted from the capital adequacy ratio (CAR) calculation, while NCC's financial assets and obligations, which NCC entered with market participants as CCP, are excluded from risk-weighted assets (RWA).

Net effect is expected to reduce capital requirements of NCC in the mid-run.

3

Introduction of Basel III rules

CAR calculation was aligned with Basel III requirements, with minimum CAR set at 8% level. NCC is expected to maintain a capital buffer to keep CAR at comfortable level exceeding 8%.

MOSCOW

1 – Other deductions include NCC's reserve funds for restructuring and liquidation risks and business risk
